UNIVERSITY HONORS STUDENT SURVIVORS

More Than Sixty Alumni Veterans Attend Commencement Exercises.

ADDRESS BY JUDGE SPEER

Speaker Pays Eloquent Tribute to Lee and to Army of Northern Virginia.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Charlottesville, Va., June 10.—This day in the program of commencement exercises at the University of Virginia was by no means crowded with formal events. It was rather a day of arrival and greeting, for, in spite of the fact that Sunday is an important division of commencement week, things do not move very rapidly until Monday evening.

This evening has claimed the attention more intensely than is usual, even here, because of the fact that survivors of the student companies that left the university in the spring of 1861 were to appear and be seated on the rostrum. The fifty years that have passed since that memorable spring have changed them from boys of heroic spirit to grizzled men of heroic memories. They were warmly received as they took their places on the platform.

As they arrived at the university each alumnus of this little group received a number of buttons, which, together with a printed list on which each veteran's name appeared with the same number as that on the button, enabled all interested to identify them, and without formal introduction to greet them in a manner that disclosed the warm feeling entertained for them. The local camps of Confederate Veterans and Sons of Confederate Veterans and the Albemarle Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy were present in their honor.

Address by Judge Speer.

It was very appropriate to have an address on General Robert E. Lee and the Army of Northern Virginia, and fortunate that so distinguished and accomplished an orator as Judge Emory Speer, of Macon, Ga., was selected to pronounce it. It was the passion of a furious intestine war, the magnanimity of popular government has at length worked its perfect work. Our national countrymen, North and South, to a man repel the slightest imputation on the military and personal honor of Robert E. Lee. And more, they now concede that Southern men may rejoice in the reunited nation, and yet yield not a heart-throb of devotion to the noble soldier of the South and their incomparable chieftain. Now, with the national brotherhood restored, every Confederate soldier's grave will be the trust immortal of our reunited land.

"Whether he sleeps where the withered leaves of the wilderness rustle to the eddying gust or in the dark swamps where the Mississippi pours its turbid volume to the gulf, or by the crystal waters of the Shenandoah, or by Chickamauga's sullen flood there, honor points the hallowed spot where valor proudly sleeps. Notwithstanding the perfect reunification in which all Americans of all sections rejoice, it is true that unqualified devotion to our country and slowly down from precedent to precedent, while successive generations of the American people have lived and died."

Stirred by Holcombe.

The presence of the alumni veterans calls to mind the fact that three or four companies made up of students marched to the front from this university. The eloquent voice of Holcombe had stirred them. Three of these companies were named "the Southern Guard," "the Sons of Liberty" and "the University Volunteers." But whether as members of these companies or otherwise, practically every student of the something like 700 found their way to the battlefields. On the walls of the rotunda at the university are bronze tablets containing the names of 500 of those who lost their lives in the military service of the Confederacy. A minute of the faculty, dated April 16, 1861, illustrates the temper of the time. The Governor of Virginia having, as was represented, authorized the volunteer companies at Charlottesville, in concert with companies at Staunton and other places, to march to Harper's Ferry with a view of capturing the Federal place to the use of Virginia in the attitude of resistance she is about to assume toward the wicked government at Washington, an invitation was extended by Captain Burke, of the Albemarle Rifles, to the University of Virginia. The invitation was received with so much enthusiasm by the university volunteers that the chairman, the faculty concurring, deemed it inexpedient to oppose an official interdiction to its acceptance. It was deemed best under the circumstances to give the procedure the form of regularity by granting leave of absence for a week to such as applied with a view of going on the expedition. At the same time all under twenty-one years of age were earnestly advised not to go.

Among the officers of the student companies still living are: Second Lieutenant William C. Davis, Frank S. Robertson, orderly, both of the University Volunteers; First Lieutenant George Ross and Third Lieutenant John M. Payne, of the Sons of Liberty. The following privates of the Southern Guard: Phil Barber, William H. Chapman, James M. Garnett, John H. Gilderleeve, Edward H. Ingle, A. J. Lewis, T. B. Mackall, W. Gordon McCabe, Randolph H. McKim, H. Clay Michle, W. P. Moore, Lloyd B. Stephenson, and Virgilus Wrenn. The following of the Sons of Liberty: R. Carter Berkeley, R. H. Cowper, and John M. Preston, and the following of the University Volunteers: W. W. Burgess, S. J. Coffman, Paul L. Deane, E. G. Gwathmey, J. F. Mister and G. J. Pratt.

The following is a complete list of

in any public utility, such as water, gas, electricity, and so on, for any community, can be provided ONLY BY A PUBLIC MONOPOLY. This TRUTH is self-evident to any man who will consider for a moment the Natural Laws and unescapable physical conditions which govern such a public utility as electric light and power.

There is no reason why any man should shy at the phrase "Public Monopoly"—least of all any man who is willing to exercise his own sober, serious and deliberate judgment instead of joining in the turbulent and frothy applause so often bestowed on that which appeals only to men's passions.

A public monopoly is a very different thing from a private monopoly. A private monopoly (exclusive possession of the trade in some commodity) may exist without any sort of public control. But in the field of public utilities an "uncontrolled monopoly" is a contradiction in terms—an absurdity.

The public utility company does not trade in commodities. It performs a public service. It cannot begin to perform that service—it cannot exist and do business at all—without first obtaining a grant of permission FROM THE PUBLIC.

Do YOU mean to let any man tell you that the community which enfranchises a corporation and has absolute power of life and death over that corporation, cannot regulate and control its operations? Nonsense! If proper and suitable governmental agencies have not been designated and specifically empowered for the purpose, there exists in every American community abundant governmental machinery for the creation of such agencies.

In Virginia special and specific governmental agencies have been authorized, established and duly empowered; and the Virginia Railway and Power Company, both as to its electric light and power business and as to its street railway business, IS SUBJECT TO FULL AND COMPLETE REGULATION AND CONTROL BY BOTH THE CITY AND THE STATE.

Furthermore, this company right now is providing SERVICE OF THE BEST QUALITY, UNSURPASSED SERVICE, SATISFACTORY SERVICE, at rates that are EXCEPTIONALLY LOW.

COMPETITION IN THE PROVIDING OF ANY PUBLIC UTILITY IS NOT REGULATION. The only way competition "regulates" service IS TO DEPRECIATE ITS QUALITY. The only way competition "regulates" rates for public service IS TO MAKE THEM HIGHER FOR ALL FUTURE TIME. THE PUBLIC has to PAY, PAY, PAY, and THE EXPLOITER OF THE COMMUNITY gets the money.

More about this in to-morrow's paper.

Virginia Railway and Power Company,
William Northrop, President.

STATUE UNVEILED TO HENRY L. WYATT

Cathell-Gilbert.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Richmond, N. C., June 10.—In delivering the address for the unveiling of the bronze statue of Henry L. Wyatt in Capitol Square here to-day, Major E. J. Hale, of Fayetteville, reviewed North Carolina's part in the inception of the Civil War and narrated most interestingly the story of the battle of Bethel, fifty-one years ago, and the heroic part Young Wyatt had in it through his volunteering with five others to make the dangerous dash into the enemy's lines to burn a house behind which Federal sharpshooters were sheltered. Major Hale sketched in detail the most interesting features of Young Wyatt's life from his birth in Richmond until his death.

The unveiling ceremonies began with a parade which moved up Fayetteville Street to Capitol Square at noon. It was under direction of Adjutant-General R. L. Leinster. The Confederate veteran section was commanded by General Julian S. Carr and his adjutant, Major H. A. London, of Rocky Mountain. Military companies in line were from Fayetteville, Tarboro and Franklin.

The opening feature was a touching invocation by Rev. A. B. Betts, the venerable chaplain of the Thirtieth North Carolina Confederate Regiment. Mrs. P. M. Williams, president of the North Carolina Daughters of the Confederacy, reviewed the efforts of the Daughters to provide the statue, and State Senator L. V. Bassett, of Rocky Mountain, told of the part the General Assembly had in the work. Then Governor Kitchin accepted in fitting terms the statue, which was unveiled amid the firing of military salute, the ribbons being drawn by Master Henry Wyatt, kinsman of the Bethel hero. Taps brought to a close the impressive ceremonies.

CAUGHT AFTER 17 YEARS.

Negro Who Killed Employer in 1895 Arrested at Rocky Mount.
Wilmington, N. C., June 10.—After enjoying his liberty seventeen years, Tom McKannon, a negro fifty-six years old, has been arrested at Rocky Mount, N. C., and is being taken back to night to Bennettville, S. C., to answer the charge of the murder of his employer, William Brickman, a prominent farmer of Marlboro county, S. C., whom, it is alleged, he shot to death with a gun loaded with slugs and nails in 1895. McKannon admits he is the man wanted, and justifies his action with an allegation of cruelty against his former employer. McKannon implicates another negro.
